

New Faculty Orientation Survey Fall 2019

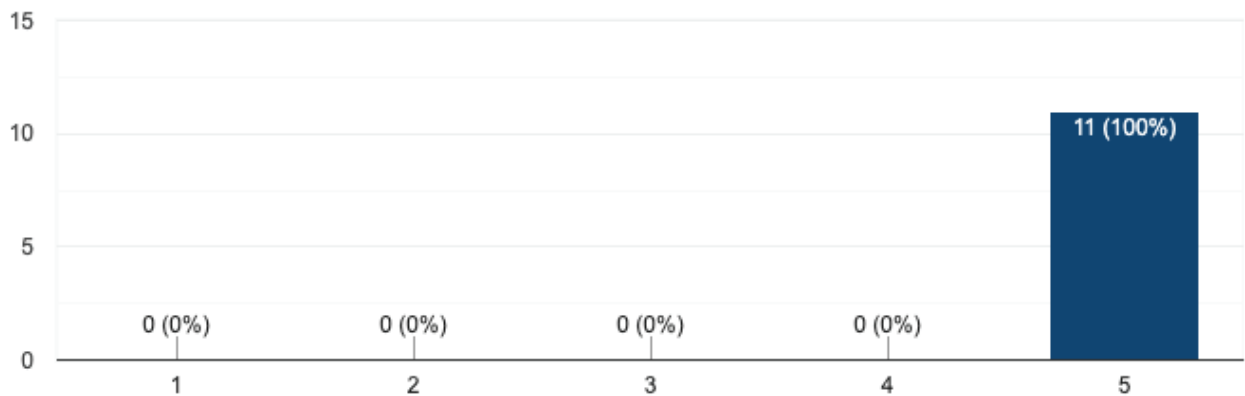

Introduction to the college, including its mission and strategic plan

11 responses

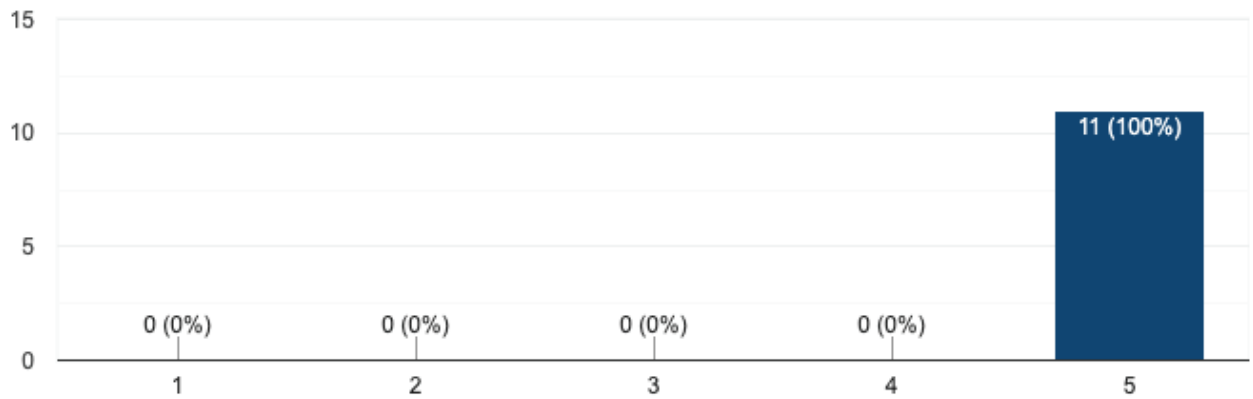

Presentations on teaching and learning resources such as the Center for Excellence in Teaching (CET) and Writing Studio

11 responses

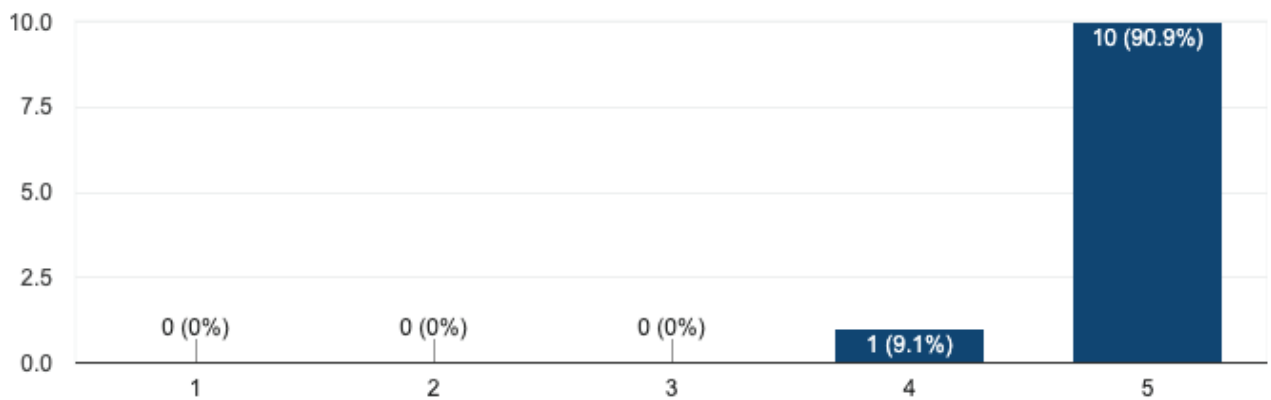

Information on campus resources such as the Library and Office of the Registrar.

11 responses

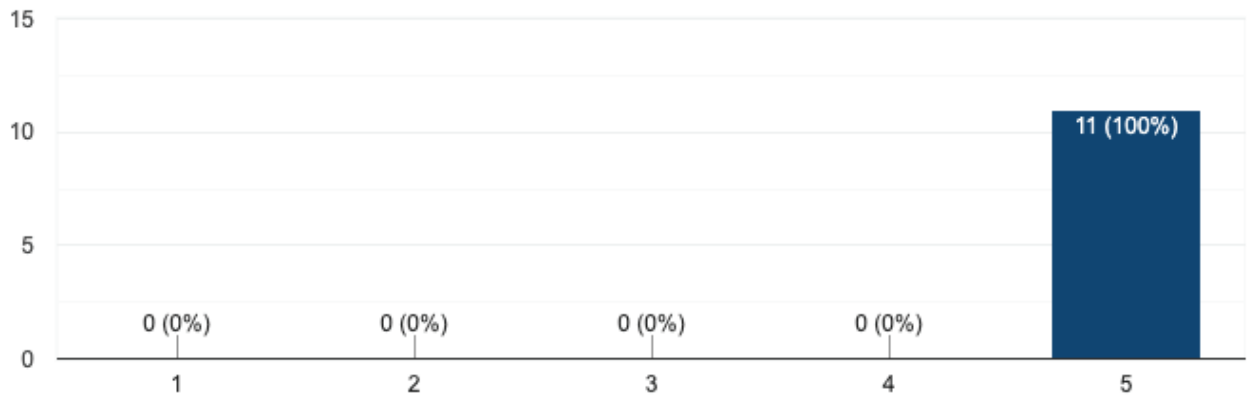

Presentations on student services

11 responses

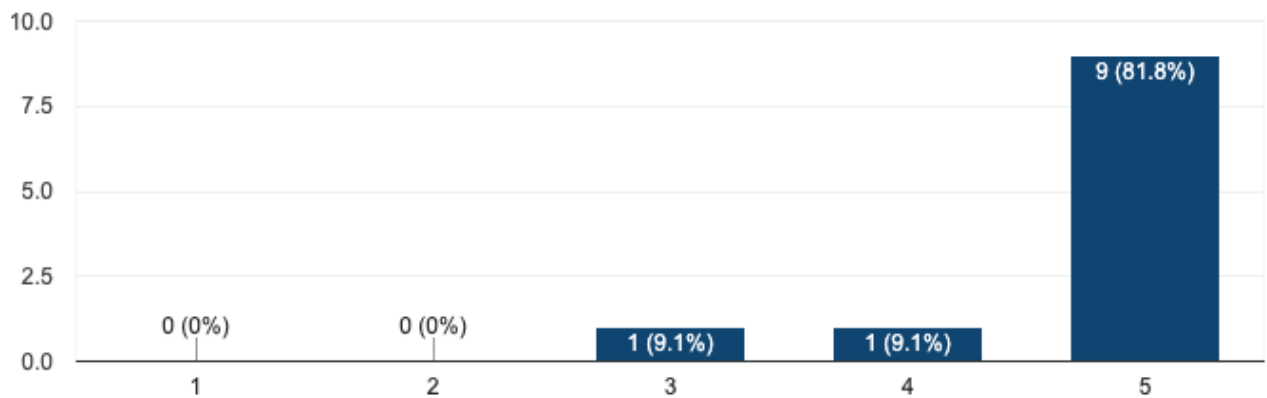

Presentations on the Faculty Senate, Faculty Development and Faculty Services.

11 responses

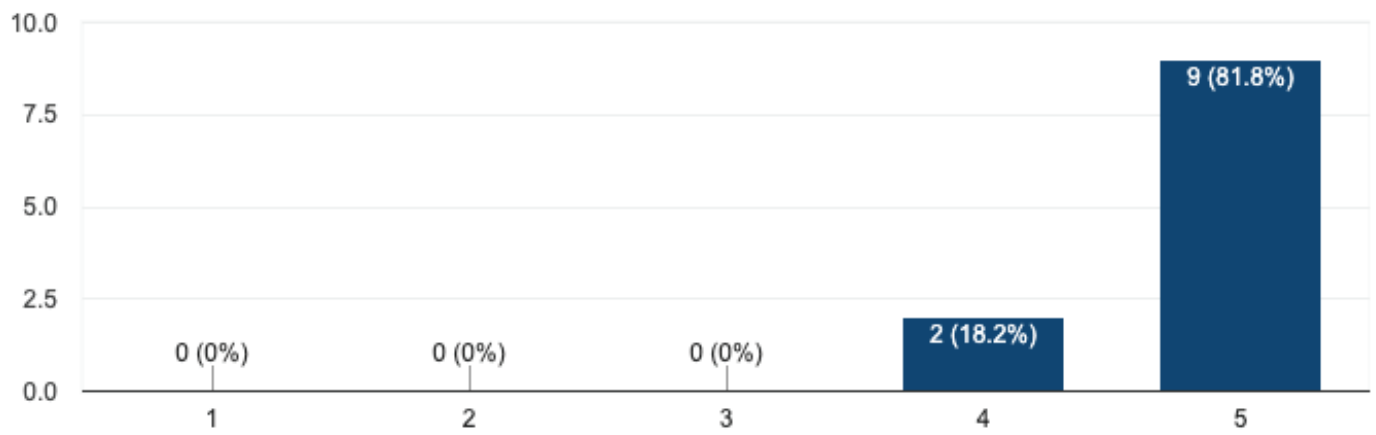

Presentations on Human Resources, UCE and conditions of employment

11 responses

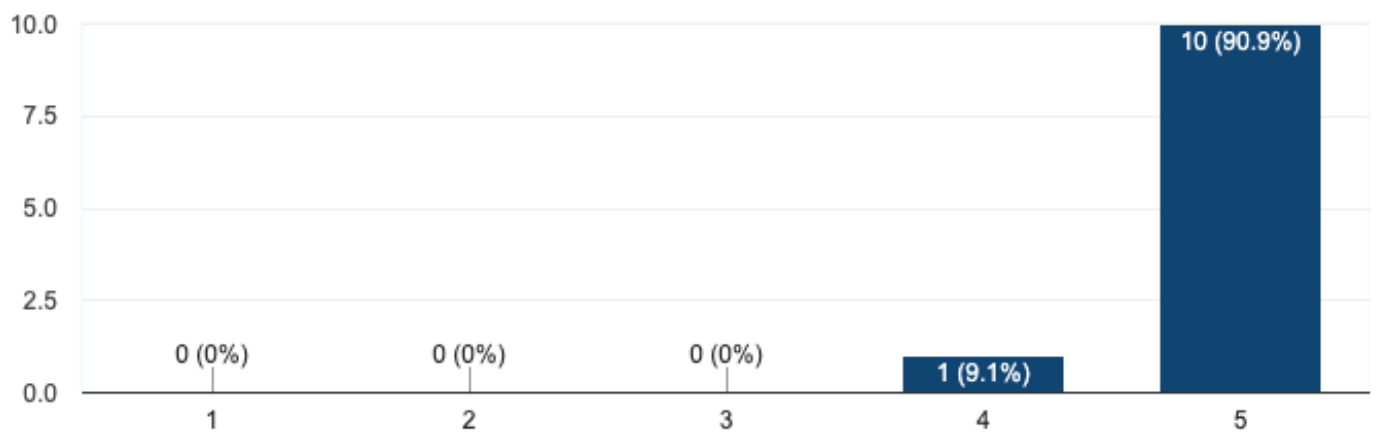

Tech workshop

11 responses

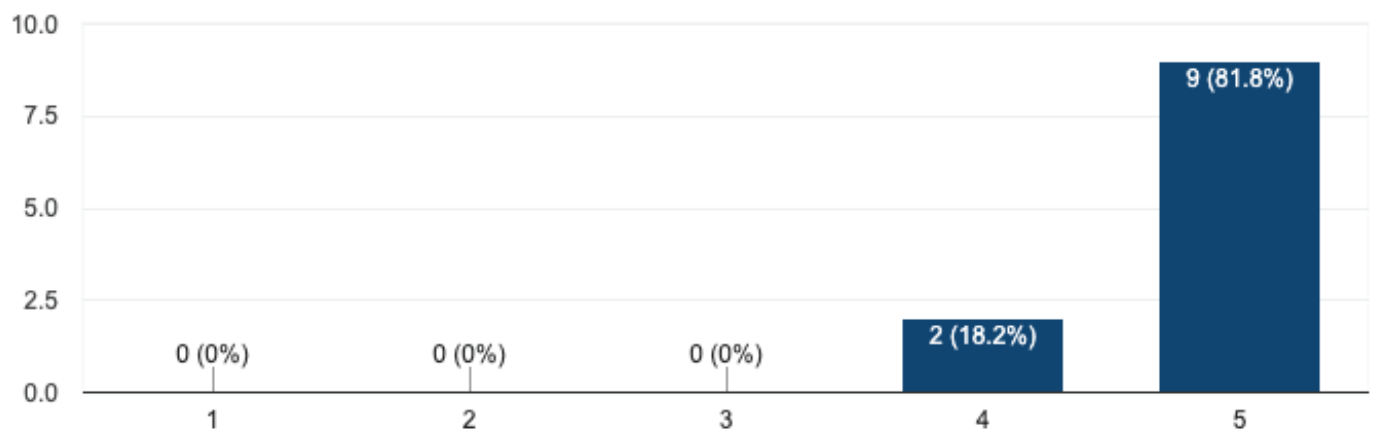

Folder materials

11 responses

Meals/receptions

11 responses

What part of the orientation was especially helpful?

11 responses

Tech Workshop

Union information

getting the opportunity to meet faculty from other departments

It was very nice to meet fellow new faculty.

Grasping overall components of the college in an intensive but short time was great.

All of it. A wealth of information and tools that I definitely need was presented in best way possible

Elaine guided us through each of our sessions in a way that provided continuity, focus, and purpose for the two days of orientation. Without that kind of narrative, I don't think that the sessions would have felt nearly as helpful. The presenters also did a nice job fostering a sense of community among new faculty members and the existing FIT community.

Getting to know new faculty

All of the content was extremely helpful! The information from the Registrar and the Library is probably the most immediately usable, but the information on college governance and the union was also very valuable.

Everything about the orientation was excellent!

What would have made the orientation more helpful?

10 responses

More information from HR team would have been ideal.

a list from individual departments with the codes for printing, how and where to get keys made... where to get supplies.

Would not really change anything

I didn't think any of the information was unnecessary but at some point it became an overwhelming amount of information. I think maybe the second of the two luncheons could instead be an opportunity for us to go out on our own, it may have provided a breather of sorts.

Great

I think it might have been helpful for new faculty members to be given more of a chance to talk and get to know each other and their work. Although bonds were certainly built, a time designated for building those connections (beyond lunch and wine) could help to foster great working relationships and collaborations for the future. I have heard from established faculty members that the people they met in their cohorts have remained some of their closest connections on campus, so that time would be well spent.

A few breaks!

Three morning sessions, ending with lunch, would have been easier than the two full days. Having the afternoons free to attend to course preparation and departmental affairs would be ideal.

Nothing extra.

Making a mini-tour mandatory. This should be done Day 1.

Additional comments:

6 responses

The security presentation was not useful. the presenter was not helpful in advising on situations that are a concern to everyone in a public setting

Thank you overall! It was a very informative experience and given me the tools to be successful.

I wanted to know more of the security part explained well, exactly what to do to protect students and us in a case of shooting. Some more example of what to do, for example, maybe showing in a movie or something? Just to go over once and our mind to be practiced once in situation, that will be good. Just like ones we see on airplain, a short brief one. Just a suggestion.

A wealth of information and tools that I definitely need was presented in best way possible

One item of concern during these sessions was the public safety presentation. The talk seemed to raise more questions than answers, and at times it seemed that our speaker was unable to provide substantial or relevant responses to the questions and concerns of those in attendance.

Overall, thank you for the great welcome to the FIT community!

It was just excellent, excellent, and excellent! What a superb job!