Cosmetics and Fragrance
Marketing and Management

The Master of Professional Studies (MPS) in Cosmetics and Fragrance Marketing and Management is structured as a two-year evening program to accommodate the schedule of working professionals.

A unique feature of the program exposes the student to the global marketplace with two required overseas field study courses, as well as one domestic field study course.

The curriculum concentrates on three areas that industry leaders have identified as crucial to managerial success:

- Core business skills, including leadership, management, communication, corporate finance, and global supply chain management.
- Marketing skills, including advanced marketing theory, consumer insights, social and digital media, product innovation.
- Specialized technical and creative competencies, including cosmetics product innovation, fragrance product innovation, color product innovation, hair care product innovation, and managing the creative process.

Students work with their Executive Mentor to define their professional development skills and growth, and are required to submit a Leadership Development Portfolio, which is part of the Advanced Topics in Leadership course.

The Capstone project reflects the partnership between industry and the classroom. Working in teams, graduating students develop an innovative, in-depth, interdisciplinary approach to the strategic topic determined by the faculty. They present their results to members of the beauty industry during an annual industry-sponsored event, which generally has 700 in attendance. including the program's Industry Advisory Board, the students' Executive Mentors, and leading beauty executives.
